

Fee for Advice Solutions

Over the past decade, there's been a growing trend in how Canadians pay for investment advice and services. The traditional model of paying a commission for each transaction is quickly being replaced with fee for advice solutions. In Canada, fee based assets have grown almost four-fold since 2005, increasing from $324 billion to over $1.1 trillion in 2015.¹ An important benefit of fee based solutions is that they provide investors with a better understanding of how much they're paying for the investment advice and services they receive. Generally speaking, investors pay a monthly or quarterly fee that covers the cost of portfolio management, trade execution, administration and wealth advisory services.
