

Pension Income-splitting Provides Tax Planning Opportunities for Couples

April 2022

The pension income-splitting rules provide an effective, yet simple, strategy to lower family taxes. Being able to split pension income provides an opportunity for couples to reduce their overall family tax bill by taking advantage of a spouse's or common-law partner's lower marginal tax rate where retirement incomes are disproportionate.

The rules allow a Canadian-resident individual receiving eligible pension income to allocate up to 50 per cent of this income to their spouse or common-law partner (hereinafter referred to as "spouse"). To make an allocation of income, each spouse must make an election on their income tax return each year. For income tax purposes, the amount allocated will be deducted from the income of the spouse who actually received the eligible pension income and added to the income of the other spouse.

The definition of eligible pension income is very similar to the definition used for determining eligibility for the pension income tax credit. As such, individuals currently eligible for this credit will generally be eligible to split pension income with their spouse. It is important to remember that it is the age of the spouse entitled to the pension income that is relevant in determining the eligibility for pension income-splitting, such that it is possible to allocate eligible pension income to a spouse who is under age 65. Ineligible income includes Old Age Security ("OAS"), Guaranteed Income Supplement ("GIS"), Canada/Quebec Pension Plan ("CPP/QPP"),¹ and RRSP withdrawals.

How pension income-splitting works

For example, assume that in 2022, both you and your spouse were age 65 and resided in Ontario. Further, assume that you earned interest and other income of $100,000, and another $50,000 of (eligible) pension income; and your spouse earned only a total of $30,000 of interest and other income.

When preparing your 2022 tax returns, you and your spouse agree to split your pension income; allocating 50 per cent of this income to your spouse (i.e., $25,000). In doing this, you reduce your taxable income by an equivalent of $25,000; resulting in the following tax savings:

- You would save approximately $10,850 in combined Federal and provincial tax by avoiding tax on the $25,000 of eligible pension income that was split with your spouse, who is taxable at a lower marginal tax rate;
- Your spouse's combined Federal and provincial tax owing would increase by approximately $6,000, given their lower marginal tax rate (with the additional $2,000 pension tax credit offsetting much of the reduction in the age credit); and
- As a result of taking advantage of pension income-splitting, your overall family tax savings in 2022 would be approximately $4,850 (i.e., $10,850 - $6,000).

In other scenarios, the amount of Old Age Security payments clawed back may be reduced as a result of pension income-splitting allocations, creating additional tax savings. The actual results will vary by province.

Eligible Pension Income
Canadians who are 65 and over and receive:*
1. Registered pension plan payments;
2. Registered Retirement Income Fund ("RRIF") payments (includes Life Income Fund ("LIF") and Locked-in Retirement Income Fund ("LRIF") payments);
3. Lifetime annuities from registered plans; and/or
4. Prescribed and non-prescribed annuities (interest component only).
Canadians who are 65 and over and receive:
1. Registered pension plan payments; and/or
2. Items (2) to (4) above; only if received as a result of the death of a spouse

* Certain Retirement Compensation Arrangement ("RCA") payments may also qualify for individuals aged 65 or over.

 Quebec residents should note that individuals under the age of 65 (at the end of the year) are unable to split pension income for Quebec provincial tax purposes.

$2,000 pension income tax credit

Since the spouse receiving the transferred income (transferee) is treated for tax purposes as having received the portion of the pension income allocated to them, the transferee spouse may be eligible for the pension income tax credit; thereby possibly doubling the use of this credit for a couple. The age of the transferee spouse is relevant in determining the eligibility for this credit, which is based on the same criteria described in the table on page one (except for RCA payments). Therefore, it may not always be possible to double up the use of the pension income credit. For example, consider a spouse, age 67, who receives RRIF income and allocates this income (which is eligible pension income) to their spouse who is only 63. While the transferee spouse would be able to claim the RRIF income on their tax return, the allocated income would not be eligible for the pension income tax credit since it does not represent eligible pension income to the transferee spouse due to their age.

The opportunity to obtain an additional pension income tax credit through pension income-splitting serves as a good reminder of other opportunities to access this tax credit. An individual 65 or over could access the benefit of the $2,000 Federal pension credit (to the extent that it is otherwise unused) by converting all or a portion of their RRSP to a RRIF or life annuity, or by purchasing an ordinary (unregistered) life annuity with other non-registered funds. As noted in the previous definition, the RRSP annuity, RRIF payments or the interest component of an unregistered annuity would qualify as eligible pension income for an individual aged 65 or over. Depending on the individual's marginal tax rate, the pension tax credit will reduce or eliminate the incremental Federal tax otherwise owing (and significantly reduce the incremental provincial tax component) on an additional $2,000 of qualifying income annually.

Reduce or avoid the OAS clawback

The decrease in the higher-income spouse's net income may reduce or eliminate the clawback of OAS benefits and can increase the amount of other income-tested tax credits, since the amount of eligible pension income allocated is deducted from the individual's income.

Spousal RRSPs still useful

The use of Spousal RRSPs as an income-splitting tool may still be recommended despite the opportunities created by pension income-splitting, since Spousal RRSPs allow for additional income-splitting prior to age 65. In addition, a Spousal RRSP provides a further opportunity to increase the amount of income-splitting beyond the 50% limitation provided by the pension income-splitting rules.

Impact on quarterly tax instalment payments

Pension income-splitting may provide additional cash flow to the extent that an individual's quarterly income tax instalments can be reduced as a result of allocating a portion of the eligible pension income to a lower-income spouse. However, care should be taken in estimating current year income tax instalments to avoid potential instalment interest charges if estimates differ from actual results.

As always, it is important to work with your tax advisor to fully understand the tax implications to your situation in determining the potential benefits of the strategies discussed in this publication.

For more information, please speak with your BMO financial professional.

¹ A form of income-splitting already exists for CPP/QPP recipients through the CPP sharing provisions which operate independently of the pension income-splitting provisions described herein. If you are receiving your CPP/QPP retirement pension, or are eligible to receive it, you can elect to share your CPP/QPP pension benefits with your spouse. You must apply to the government requesting an equal share of the retirement benefits you both earned during the years you were together. The amount of CPP/QPP that is split depends on how long you and your spouse have lived together and your contributions made to CPP/QPP during that time. If only one spouse is a CPP/QPP contributor, you may share that one pension.

BMO Private Wealth provides this publication for informational purposes only and it is not and should not be construed as professional advice to any individual. The information contained in this publication is based on material believed to be reliable at the time of publication, but BMO Private Wealth cannot guarantee the information is accurate or complete. Individuals should contact their BMO representative for professional advice regarding their personal circumstances and/or financial position. The comments included in this publication are not intended to be a definitive analysis of tax applicability or trust and estates law. The comments are general in nature and professional advice regarding an individual's particular tax position should be obtained in respect of any person's specific circumstances.

BMO Private Wealth is a brand name for a business group consisting of Bank of Montreal and certain of its affiliates in providing private wealth management products and services. Not all products and services are offered by all legal entities within BMO Private Wealth. Banking services are offered through Bank of Montreal. Investment management, wealth planning, tax planning, and philanthropy planning services are offered through BMO Nesbitt Burns Inc. and BMO Private Investment Counsel Inc. If you are already a client of BMO Nesbitt Burns Inc., please contact your Investment Advisor for more information. Estate, trust, and custodial services are offered through BMO Trust Company. BMO Private Wealth legal entities do not offer tax advice. BMO Trust Company and BMO Bank of Montreal are Members of CDIC.

© Registered trademark of Bank of Montreal, used under license.

All rights are reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced in any form, or referred to in any other publication, without the express written permission of BMO Private Wealth.