

A Will reflects your succession intentions and names an appropriate executor (liquidator in Quebec) to oversee the administration of your estate after your death. Having a Will is the only way you can control who will administer your estate, the manner in which your estate will be distributed and to whom.

This brief article – Preparing Your Last Will and Testament – explains various aspects of Will preparation including, the importance of appointing an appropriate executor, life events that warrant a Will review and the use of testamentary trusts.

Please contact us if you have any questions about the article or would like to discuss your estate planning needs.
