

It was announced this week that performer Prince died with an estate estimated at $300 million, and did not have a will. It is an understatement to suggest this problem will take countless hours, and perhaps years of unnecessary legal work to sort things out. Dying without a will is not restricted to the rich and famous as many Canadians fall under this category. As this summary illustrates, dying without a will leaves your loved ones with a potential legal and financial headache they never anticipated.

Sincerely,
